BASKETBALL OPEN GYMJune–August / Not required registrationMondays 6–9 PM
Christian Life Center is open to men and women, from our church and community, playing recreational basketball. Questions, e-mail sports@clacamphill.com.Use The West Entrance to our parking area and enter through the doors labeled Christian Life Center CHARLOTTE, N.C. 28209 MAP U.S. Introduction Avondale Presbyterian Church Basketball Ministry provides a Christian scholarship to children and adolescents, helping them grow in mind, body and spirit in the Avondale team's several of the more than 200 teams on the field in the Playbook for Life Ministries youth basketball league. This league consists of many nominal churches. The league's goal is to give service to every church and allow young people to play in a competitive but healthy environment that shows the character of Christ. Practice, games and coach membership in Avondale are not required to participate in the team. Teams practice once a week (Mon–Fri) at 1 hour usually starting in November. The games start in early December and take place until the beginning of March. Games are played in various church gyms around Charlotte, including Avondale. All teams except Division AA complete their season with a tournament in March. In March, a banquet was held for Avondale teams to celebrate the season. All trainers must meet the requirements of the Avondale Child Protection Policy (CYPP) and complete child protection policy training. We are looking for coaches who will not only teach basic skills, but, more importantly, serve as positive Christian examples for children and young people. Coaches set the tone with their leadership and character. Their actions and words directly influence the behavior of their team. It is expected that coaches will demonstrate good athleticism between peers and opponents. Short dedication takes place before every practice and games open prayer. Covenants of players and parents In order to provide a quality program in which players, parents, coaches and officials all have a positive experience to participate in the league, it is necessary to sign a pact. Please parent/caregiver to read the pact with your child. Covenant includes respect for others, good sports and playing with Christ. This article contains content written as advertising. The External Connections Christian Life Center Academy received from [f] my brother hadn't invited me to Transformada, then I wouldn't have known anything about God. ... I'm probably on drugs, alcohol and sex, Chuy says. Chuy's alternate life is not hard to guess because many of his friends already live. In the expanding city of La Paz, Mexico, drugs are widely available. Some children start using them already 13 years. But in recent years, more and more children have found an alternative through the transformados program. Five days a week, they gather on the basketball court to learn new sports skills from the TEAM's missionary trio. Basketball is a draw, but a missionary dream something much bigger. They want to see children transformed the mighty love of Jesus Christ. Meeting children where they are for transformados philosophy (or Transformed) is simple: Jesus met people where they were - on the market, on the beach, in their homes - so we have to do the same. Our vision is to use creative initiatives like basketball and other sports... to reach children and their families to the Lord, says TEAM missionary Phil Eager. Children from elementary school to university come to Transformados to study. Before and after practice, staff invite children to return to the Center for Community Mentoring, Bible Study and Worship Services. I hated basketball The first time he came to Transformados, Chuy had no interest in actually playing. I hated basketball, Chuy says. But his brother invited him, and Chuy wanted to make friends. Early on, Chuy saw that there was something unique about people in Transformados. If you asked for help, they offered it on the spot. They treated you like a family. Chuy didn't care about basketball, but he was drawn to the kindness of Transformada he saw people there. He should have known what they were so different. It made Chuy think: Why am I not like this? What's changing in them? When he asked Phil and his co-workers, they said it was because they were god in their hearts. Kindness He should have known Chuy grew up Catholic. He knew about God. But it's been years since Chuy went to mass. And what Chuy saw in Transformados was different than anything he had seen before. Transformada's staff invited him to share his heart with them after each practice. When his grandfather died, they canceled the practice so that everyone could go to wake up. Then they invited him to Easter Camp in Rancho el Camino, a partner ministry. It's like, you enter the camp, and God is waiting for you, Chuy says. Chuy was stunned by the goodness of the camp workers. They were like the workers of Transformada - loving, without any thought that they would be returned. The short-term mission team handed the Bible, and Chuy began searching for god's word direction in life. When Chuy told his friends he wanted to be a Christian, they said it was weird. But Chuy wasn't fazed by his decisions. As long as you are with God, Chuy says, everything is fine. Pray instead of partying Many children start Transformados, just seeing it as a safe place to go after school and homework. Parents like it because they get their kids outside, spend time with healthy friends. Gradually, however, children learn of the life of God's daṣ—a life that is much larger than anyone else can offer. The government can make all these programs... try to keep children from drug use, but really, the thing that is going to change their lives is Christ transforming their lives, says Pattie Eager, Philo's wife and collaborator. When friends invited Chuy to parties, he began to pray, to be a different boy, not just to parties, drugs and things. That. ... I ask God to help me good decisions. Ever since giving his life to Christ, Chuy has sought ways to share his faith with others. It helps teach younger children and lead worship in Transformada meetings. One of those good solutions was to find their own ways to serve others. Chuy helps lead worship in his church, as well as Transformada's pehogesacuye higezuzoffi pozohoso suso. The External Connections Christian Life Center Academy received from [f] my brother hadn't invited me to Transformada, then I wouldn't have known anything about God. ... I'm probably on drugs, alcohol and sex, Chuy says. Chuy's alternate life is not hard to guess because many of his friends already live. In the expanding city of La Paz, Mexico, drugs are widely available. Some children start using them already 13 years. But in recent years, more and more children have found an alternative through the transformados program. Five days a week, they gather on the basketball court to learn new sports skills from the TEAM's missionary trio. Basketball is a draw, but a missionary dream something much bigger. They want to see children transformed the mighty love of Jesus Christ. Meeting children where they are for transformados philosophy (or Transformed) is simple: Jesus met people where they were - on the market, on the beach, in their homes - so we have to do the same. Our vision is to use creative initiatives like basketball and other sports... to reach children and their families to the Lord, says TEAM missionary Phil Eager. Children from elementary school to university come to Transformados to study. Before and after practice, staff invite children to return to the Center for Community Mentoring, Bible Study and Worship Services. I hated basketball The first time he came to Transformados, Chuy had no interest in actually playing. I hated basketball, Chuy says. But his brother invited him, and Chuy wanted to make friends. Early on, Chuy saw that there was something unique about people in Transformados. If you asked for help, they offered it on the spot. They treated you like a family. Chuy didn't care about basketball, but he was drawn to the kindness of Transformada he saw people there. He should have known what they were so different. It made Chuy think: Why am I not like this? What's changing in them? When he asked Phil and his co-workers, they said it was because they were god in their hearts. Kindness He should have known Chuy grew up Catholic. He knew about God. But it's been years since Chuy went to mass. And what Chuy saw in Transformados was different than anything he had seen before. Transformada's staff invited him to share his heart with them after each practice. When his grandfather died, they canceled the practice so that everyone could go to wake up. Then they invited him to Easter Camp in Rancho el Camino, a partner ministry. It's like, you enter the camp, and God is waiting for you, Chuy says. Chuy was stunned by the goodness of the camp workers. They were like the workers of Transformada - loving, without any thought that they would be returned. The short-term mission team handed the Bible, and Chuy began searching for god's word direction in life. When Chuy told his friends he wanted to be a Christian, they said it was weird. But Chuy wasn't fazed by his decisions. As long as you are with God, Chuy says, everything is fine. Pray instead of partying Many children start Transformados, just seeing it as a safe place to go after school and homework. Parents like it because they get their kids outside, spend time with healthy friends. Gradually, however, children learn of the life of God's daṣ—a life that is much larger than anyone else can offer. The government can make all these programs... try to keep children from drug use, but really, the thing that is going to change their lives is Christ transforming their lives, says Pattie Eager, Philo's wife and collaborator. When friends invited Chuy to parties, he began to pray, to be a different boy, not just to parties, drugs and things. That. ... I ask God to help me good decisions. Ever since giving his life to Christ, Chuy has sought ways to share his faith with others. It helps teach younger children and lead worship in Transformada meetings. One of those good solutions was to find their own ways to serve others. Chuy helps lead worship in his church, as well as Transformada's pehogesacuye higezuzoffi pozohoso suso. BASKETBALL OPEN GYMJune–August / Not required registrationMondays 6–9 PM
Christian Life Center is open to men and women, from our church and community, playing recreational basketball. Questions, e-mail sports@clacamphill.com.Use The West Entrance to our parking area and enter through the doors labeled Christian Life Center CHARLOTTE, N.C. 28209 MAP U.S. Introduction Avondale Presbyterian Church Basketball Ministry provides a Christian scholarship to children and adolescents, helping them grow in mind, body and spirit in the Avondale team's several of the more than 200 teams on the field in the Playbook for Life Ministries youth basketball league. This league consists of many nominal churches. The league's goal is to give service to every church and allow young people to play in a competitive but healthy environment that shows the character of Christ. Practice, games and coach membership in Avondale are not required to participate in the team. Teams practice once a week (Mon–Fri) at 1 hour usually starting in November. The games start in early December and take place until the beginning of March. Games are played in various church gyms around Charlotte, including Avondale. All teams except Division AA complete their season with a tournament in March. In March, a banquet was held for Avondale teams to celebrate the season. All trainers must meet the requirements of the Avondale Child Protection Policy (CYPP) and complete child protection policy training. We are looking for coaches who will not only teach basic skills, but, more importantly, serve as positive Christian examples for children and young people. Coaches set the tone with their leadership and character. Their actions and words directly influence the behavior of their team. It is expected that coaches will demonstrate good athleticism between peers and opponents. Short dedication takes place before every practice and games open prayer. Covenants of players and parents In order to provide a quality program in which players, parents, coaches and officials all have a positive experience to participate in the league, it is necessary to sign a pact. Please parent/caregiver to read the pact with your child. Covenant includes respect for others, good sports and playing with Christ. This article contains content written as advertising.
